Product details

Danny Augustine says of his print, 'I was thinking about the romance in the air at Farmhouse and how many people would have proposed in front of the fires in the cabins or on the tiny rowing boats. I was obsessed with a song called 'What does it take (to win your love)' by Alton Ellis. If I had to win a girl's love, flowers and a couple nights at Farmhouse would be a good start, so they became the main theme.' Kate Bryan, head of collections at Soho House, says: 'By marrying together the mediums of paint, photography and drawing, Danny creates an original style of work that is distinctively his own. At the same time, he explores the role that desire, lust and sexuality play within modern society.'
